Probate in Ontario

A Practical Guide

Neil Milton

This is a short, practical guide to probate in Ontario. Probate is the process of securing approval from a Court for the person entitled to administer an estate of a deceased individual. Information on how to administer an estate after probate is found on our website and in our guide, An Executor’s Checklist. Information on wills and powers of attorney are found on our website and in our guides, Wills in Ontario: A Practical Guide and Powers of Attorney. Information on estate disputes is found in our eBook Estate Disputes in Ontario.

About Us
About Us

We are Miltons Estates Law a team of Ontario lawyers dedicated to providing excellent advice about estates law. We focus on providing advice that is practical, cost-effective, and results-oriented.

We do not draft wills.

We assist executors with all facets of estates, contentious and non-contentious, from probate to passing of accounts. We assist beneficiaries to enforce their rights. And we frequently act as the estate trustee to administer estates quickly and fairly.

About this book

This eBook is exclusively about estate law in Ontario.

Estate law is very parochial – it varies from state to state, province to province, and country to country. In effect there are over 60 different estate law jurisdictions in North America alone and each is different, sometimes profoundly so.

Ontario is a common law jurisdiction, and estate law in civil law jurisdictions such as most countries in Europe and Latin America tends to be quite different.

This eBook is intended to be short informal guide for non-lawyers about probate in Ontario. It is not precise legal analysis, legal advice about your particular situation, or a how-to-guide.
Other eBooks in this series

This eBook is one of a series. The others are:

- Wills: A Practical Guide
- Powers of Attorney: A Practical Guide
- The Executor’s Checklist.

While there is some overlap in the material, these eBooks cover different material. For the most thorough understanding of the subject matter, we recommend that you consult all of them together.

Terminology

A person who makes a will is a ‘testator’. A person who dies without a will dies ‘intestate’.

An executor is a person named by the testator in their will to administer the estate.

Often, a Court order is necessary to actually administer an estate (see below for when probate is required). The person appointed by the Court to administer the estate of the deceased is the ‘estate trustee’. Depending on whether there is a will or not the estate trustee is the ‘estate trustee with a will’ or the ‘estate trustee without a will’.

Probate is the process by which the Court appoints an estate trustee. Where there is a will, the person with the first right to apply for a Certificate of Appointment of Estate Trustee is the executor, and if the person applying is not the executor, the reason that the executor is not applying must be provided.
What is Probate?

Probate is the Court procedure for:
- formal approval of a will by the Court as the valid last will of the deceased; and
- formal confirmation by the Court of the appointment of the person who will act as the executor of the estate.

In effect, probate is what gives the executor the authority to act on behalf of the deceased.

During probate, the two key questions that the Court must address are:
- Is this the last will of the deceased?
- Is this will valid?
- Is the proposed estate trustee the right person to administer this estate?

When is probate required?

Not all estates require probate. However, the number of estates that can be resolved quickly and informally without probate or any formal proceedings is falling rapidly.

Whether or not probate is required depends largely on:

- the nature of the assets in the estate, and
- whether the choice of executor, or actions of the executor, may be contested by one or more beneficiaries (inheritors) or other people.

Generally, financial institutions and land registry offices will require probate to confirm that the estate trustee is authorized to receive the assets and funds that belonged to the deceased person.
Probate will likely be required when the estate includes any of:

- real estate (houses, condos, apartments, cottages) owned by the deceased in his or her name alone or as a tenant in common (ie. Owned any way but ‘in joint tenancy’);

- shares of a publicly-traded company (stocks listed on a stock market); or,

- funds or investments held at a financial institution (bank, trust company, brokerage) held solely in the name of the deceased and not ‘in joint tenancy’ with another person (note that sometime these institutions will not require probate if the amounts are nominal).

The estate should definitely be probated if:

- there is (or is likely to be) any dispute about the choice of estate trustee, or
- the actions of the estate trustee are likely to give rise to any dispute, or,
- any beneficiary is unable to consent (because they are a minor child, or, an adult lacking capacity).

There is no exemption from probate because it is ‘simple’ or ‘everyone agrees’ or ‘the will is clear’.

When probate is not required.

There are only two types of estate that normally do not require probate:

a. Where all of the assets pass directly to a beneficiary or joint owner. This is fairly common for modest estates of the ‘first spouse to die’ of long-married spouses.

b. Where the estate is modest and consists solely of uncontested funds in a bank account, the bank agrees to waive the requirement for probate before releasing the funds. Before waiving probate, most banks require the amount on deposit to be less than $40,000, require there to be absolutely no dispute about the estate and who is entitled to the funds, and require all recipients of the funds to sign an Indemnity in which they agree to indemnify the bank from any liability for releasing the funds. This waiver of probate by the bank is not a right - is entirely at the discretion of the bank holding the funds and can be denied at any time without reason. If the bank refuses to waive probate, then the solution is to probate as quickly as possible.

Named in a will: act or renounce?

Just because you are named the executor in a will does not mean that you are obliged to accept.

If for any reason you are unable or unwilling to take on the onerous duties of being the estate trustee you may renounce the role without explanation or cost, provided you do so before taking any steps to administer the estate.

Renunciation is completed by signing a simple form.

If you start administering the estate you cannot simply change your mind and renounce. Once you begin or interfere with the estate you must ‘resign’, and in order to do so you must pass your accounts (see below).

In general terms, you are permitted to make reasonable inquiries to see if you want to take on the role without ‘meddling’ in the estate. If you take any action which changes the estate (deal with any assets or liabilities) for instance, then you have ‘meddled’ and can only be released from liability by resigning and passing your accounts.
Insolvent Estates

One of the most common reasons for a named executor to refuse to probate is when the estate has debts greater than its assets. This is known as an insolvent or bankrupt estate. Insolvent estates should be handled, if at all, by a registered insolvency practitioner (a ‘bankruptcy trustee’).

When the estate has debts

The estate trustee is not automatically liable for the debts of the deceased. Just because the deceased had debts does not automatically create a problem or liability for the executor or estate trustee.

The estate trustee is personally liable for:

- Debts that the estate trustee incurs (such as funeral and legal fees). The estate trustee is not liable for costs incurred by other people.

- Ensuring that the assets of the estate are properly distributed, and this means that all creditors are paid 100% in full before any distribution is made to any beneficiary.

A potential estate trustee who believes that the estate is insolvent should investigate, but should not meddle in the estate before deciding whether to act or renounce (see above).

There is no harm in probating an estate with debts or liabilities, where the assets exceed the debts. Debts such as income taxes are very common, and are commonly paid off from estate assets before any distribution to the beneficiaries.
If the debts of the estate are complex or contentious (for instance, with litigation underway), it is very helpful if the estate trustee has experience dealing with commercial disputes and civil litigation. Accordingly, if the estate has complex or uncertain debts, it is common for relatives to renounce in favour of a professional who then applies to be appointed the estate trustee.

The cost of probate

Legal fees for applications for ‘probate’ are usually borne by the estate.

The cost to probate is comprised of:

- Legal fees, if any;
- Disbursements, if any; and,
- Estate Administration Tax. (see below).

Generally, the legal fees to probate an estate are in the range of $1,000 - $4,000. Except in highly unusual cases there is no reason for probate fees to be more.

In our firm, the legal fees for the vast majority of probate applications are in the range of $2,000 - $3,000. Our fees are detailed on our website, and we will gladly provide a fixed price quote in advance.

The costs of estate administration

Once an estate has been probated there are a number of possible expenses and costs. These vary from estate to estate but often include:

- Legal advice received by the estate trustee, including related to passing of accounts
- Accounting and tax filing services
- Investment advice
- Home cleaning and staging services
- Real estate brokerage services
- Services related to valuing and selling personal property
- The services of the estate trustee

In all cases, the costs incurred and fees charged must be reasonable. The costs of some of these services will be borne by the estate; the costs of services which are ‘normally’ provided by estate trustees will usually reduce the compensation otherwise available for the estate trustee.

Getting advice

A lawyer to assist with probate

You do not always need a lawyer to probate an estate – it is certainly possible to ‘do it yourself’. However, dealing with the courts and the required paperwork can be a complex and confusing process, and most people do seek legal assistance with probate. In particular, if there is no will, and it is necessary to deal with multiple consents and renunciations, or apply to the court for an Order to dispense with a bond (see below), or the actions of the estate trustee are likely to be challenged or closely scrutinized (for instance by a sibling who is a beneficiary but not a co-executor), then we strongly recommend that you seek professional assistance with probate and all other aspects of the administration of the estate. Also, if delay is likely to cost money (for instance if the estate has substantial value) then hiring a lawyer to move it along faster is usually very cost-effective. Remember, each month of delay costs the beneficiaries income – so trying but slowing down probate is rarely a good idea.

The lawyer acts for the estate trustee and not for the estate

An estate is not a person. An estate is a trust, and the trustee is the estate trustee.

Accordingly, the estate does not hire a lawyer, and there is no such thing as a lawyer ‘for the estate’ with some magical duty to the estate or the beneficiaries.

When an estate trustee hires a lawyer, that lawyer advises the trustee who hired them. This lawyer will be acting for, and owe duties to, the estate trustee who hired them and not to the estate, any other estate trustees (unless the all agreed to retain the same counsel), the beneficiaries, or any other person.

If co-executors have a disagreement, they should hire separate legal counsel.

If a beneficiary disagrees with the conduct of the executor(s), that beneficiary should hire their own legal counsel. A beneficiary should never expect the lawyer for the estate trustee to look out for the beneficiary’s interests. In fact, many lawyers acting for an estate trustee will refuse to speak to any beneficiary directly.
There is no obligation to retain any particular lawyer to assist with probate. There is absolutely no obligation to use the lawyer who drafted the will.

When you engage a lawyer, you should be comfortable with the lawyer and their engagement terms, including price, expertise, manner and service. As long as you pay all outstanding accounts, you can switch lawyers at any time. You can get a second opinion.

Some lawyers charge a fee that is a percentage of the estate for all aspects of advising the estate trustee, from probate through distribution. Depending on the value of the estate and the actual work required, this may result in an extremely high fee. This is generally an old-fashioned way of charging. You are not obliged to accept these terms.

The accounts of lawyers are subject to supervision by the Courts under a process known as ‘assessment’. Invoices must be fair having regard to all of the relevant circumstances which include time, effort, skill, quality of work and outcome, the important of the matter in issue, and the risk (if any) taken by the lawyer. If you are unhappy with the fees charged by a lawyer, you should use this process to ensure that the fees charged were fair.

Getting advice and assistance after probate

In all cases, the trustee must meet their obligations to the beneficiaries. They cannot avoid these liabilities by delegating to third parties. Equally, however, while it is possible for trustees to handle the entire estate alone, often it is best practice to hire a professional with specialized expertise as this produces both better results and a paper trail to support the results achieved. For instance, the benefits of hiring a real estate professional should include proper pricing and marketing of the property to ensure that the estate receives fair value for a property as quickly as possible.

In addition to hiring professional advisors, estate trustees can hire third parties to assist with routine tasks of administering the estate, and often this is by far the best course of action. For instance, it is often the duty of an estate trustee to sell a house owned by the deceased within a reasonable time. It is not the duty of the estate trustee to personally clean and prepare the house for sale without hiring anyone or incurring any costs. Often it is in the beneficiaries’ best interest for the estate trustee to incur reasonable fees to hire junk removal, auction, cleaning, and staging services to get the necessary work done quickly and effectively.

Accountants: Doing your own taxes is simple compared to being an executor. If you don't do your own taxes without an accountant, then you definitely should not be trying to do the taxes of the deceased without advice.

Lawyers: Lawyers advise their clients on rights and duties, and, they can assist to enforce rights (by prosecuting legal proceedings) and assist trustees to perform duties (by doing such things as drafting probate applications).

An estate trustee can entrust a lawyer to handle almost the entire administration of the estate. However, the estate trustee remains responsible for the outcome, and the estate trustee should not be compensated for work performed by legal counsel (and legal counsel should be compensated at trustee rates not lawyers’ rates for performing trustee work).

Other experts: Executors often hire other experts to assist with particular matters, including:

- investment advisors to assist with investments;
- accountants to assist with accounting and tax returns;
- real estate agents to assist with selling real estate;
- appraisers and auctioneers to assist with selling other assets.
Who pays?

Professional advice to perform the role
As a general rule reasonable professional fees incurred by the estate trustee securing professional advice that assists her to carry out her duties will be borne by the estate, and not by the executor herself. Examples include real estate agents, investment advisors, and lawyers assisting to interpret the will and with probate applications.

Assistance to fulfill trustee duties
Fees incurred by the estate trustee to hire others to help fulfill duties of the estate trustee should generally be paid for by the estate trustee, by way of a corresponding reduction in compensation to the trustee. Examples include fees for paying bills and cleaning a home. If estate expenses are paid by a law firm that is holding estate funds in trust, the fees for these services should reduce trustee compensation.

Assistance defending the trustee
Legal fees incurred by the estate trustee to protect their inheritance as beneficiary are usually not a legitimate estate expense.

Fees incurred by an estate trustee defending their role or performance as estate trustee may be a legitimate estate expense, especially if the trustee is vindicated or if the problem was caused by the testator.

The estate trustee is responsible for ensuring that the fees charged by their legal counsel (and all other professional advisors) are fair and reasonable, and should take steps to object to any unreasonable fee charged by any professional.
The value of the estate

The estate of a deceased person is composed of the assets and liabilities of the deceased, valued as at the date of death.

The assets of the deceased

All property including real property and personal property (tangible and intangible) owned by the deceased on their death falls into their estate and must be dealt with by their estate trustee. The value for probate purposes is the value on the date of death. This raises the key issue: what assets are in the estate? Some of the most contentious issues are digital subscriptions, jointly owned assets, and financial assets with designated beneficiaries. These are discussed briefly below.

The liabilities of the deceased and the estate

The estate trustee must identify and pay all liabilities of the deceased, and all debts incurred by the estate. It can be a challenge to identify liabilities of the deceased. Estate trustees are protected from personal liability from undisclosed liabilities if they advertise prior to distributing the estate. Traditionally these advertisements were placed in local newspapers, but now some online notices are acceptable.

Estate assets – common challenges

Currently, pets are considered tangible personal property and thus can be estate ‘assets’.

Intellectual property rights, such as ownership of copyright to songs, literary works, images and videos are intangible personal property and can form part of an estate. Conversely, however, users of many digital ‘services’ such as Facebook, Instagram and LinkedIn often have no ownership rights to their accounts and access to these accounts by estate trustees may be limited or prohibited by the owners of the services.

Jointly-owned Assets – Be careful!

Houses and bank accounts jointly held by the deceased and one or more of their adult children are a frequent cause of expensive estate disputes. See our eBook on Disputes for more.

Beneficiary designations for RRIFs, RRSPs, TFSAs, and life insurance can also cause serious tax problems, and unfair distribution of the estate. However, they are often signed quickly at a bank without much thought. Make sure you understand the impact of these very important designations.
Joint ownership

Many assets are owned by more than one person. Some, but not all, forms of joint ownership result in the deceased losing all ownership of the asset on their death. When this occurs, the assets does not form part of the estate of the deceased, and is not governed by their will. For instance, when real estate is owned ‘in joint tenancy with a right of survivorship’, then upon the first death of a co-owner, the deceased ceases to have any ownership of the property and the surviving co-owner is now the sole owner. Note that there is no ‘transfer’ of the asset to the survivor, the deceased simply drops off title to the property.

Beneficiary designations

Some financial ‘assets’ can pass directly to a designated or named beneficiary and as a result do not fall into the estate of the deceased. Except where a will is clearly drafted to over-rule a previous designation, these designations often prevail regardless of whether the deceased had a will or not.

Life insurance

Life insurance, which often has limited or no value to the deceased before or after death, results in a contractually agreed payment by the insurer to the beneficiaries of the policy. If the life insurance passes directly to a named beneficiary it is not part of the estate and is not governed by the will.

If there is no surviving designated beneficiary, then the policy will be paid to the estate of the deceased.

The proceeds of a life insurance policy are not taxable income for the recipient (whether a beneficiary or the estate).

Pensions

Pensioners have some, but limited, rights to designate beneficiaries of their pension. Generally, the beneficiary of any pension rights that survive the death of the pensioner must pass to the person who was the spouse of the deceased at the time of death (whether common law or by marriage).

If, but only if, the deceased did not have a spouse at their death can the pension benefits pass to a named beneficiary.
TFSAs
There is no tax related to a TFSA on death.

There are two different types of designations for TFSAs:

a) A successor annuitant. If the spouse of the TFSA holder is named as a successor annuitant, then the entire TFSA rolls over to the spouse. The TFSA remains a TFSA and thus can continue to grow tax free for the life of the surviving spouse.

b) A named beneficiary, who receives the proceeds of the TFSA tax free but the funds in it cease to be inside a TFSA and cease to grow tax free (although if the recipient has “TFSA contribution room” they may contribute the funds to their own TFSA).

In both cases of beneficiary designations, the TFSA passes outside the estate and does not form part of the estate of the deceased.

If there is no designated beneficiary, or no beneficiary survives the testator, then the TFSA falls into the estate.

RRSPs and RRIFs
RRSPs and RRIFs can pass by designation directly outside the estate. When there is a valid designation, not over-ruled by a will, the full value of the plan will pass to the named beneficiary outside the estate without involvement of the estate trustee and without any Estate Administration Tax being payable.

If the RRSP/RRIF is ‘rolled over’ to a surviving spouse, it retains its character as tax-deferred savings, and does not create taxable income on the death of the holder (taxable income is generated as funds are withdrawn from the plan).

If the designated beneficiary of the RRSP/RRIF is anyone other than the spouse of the deceased, then the full value of the Plan must be included in taxable income of the deceased in the year of death. The tax payable can be very significant. This tax is payable by the estate, not by the beneficiary.

Where there is no designation, or the named beneficiary pre-deceases the plan holder, the value does fall into the estate of the deceased.
Divorce and Separation

If married spouses divorce, a will made before the divorce remains valid but is read as if the ex-spouse pre-deceased.

Divorce does not automatically revoke beneficiary designations on life insurance, TFSAs, RRSPs or RRIFs. These designations should be dealt with in any separation agreement, and with each plan separately (or in a will made after the divorce).

Where legally married spouses separate but do not divorce, the separation does not automatically terminate the ex-spouses rights under the will or any beneficiary designation.

Spouses who are legally married may elect to receive their entitlements under the Family Law Act, as if they had divorced the day before the death, rather than under the will of the deceased. Therefore, a will that attempts to disinherit a separated but not divorced ex-spouse may be ineffective.

Common law spouses have no inheritance rights in Ontario. They may have rights to support, under the Family Law Act or the Succession Law Reform Act.
Passing accounts: be prepared from the start!

An estate trustee has a duty to account to the beneficiaries of the estate. This includes accounting for the assets recovered, the income generated, the fees incurred, and the distribution of the estate.

The process by which the Courts ‘supervise’ the conduct of estate trustees is known as the ‘passing of accounts’. By no means are accounts passed for all estates. Often, ‘informal’ accounts are all that is required. If all beneficiaries approve the accounts of the estate trustee, then a formal passing of accounts can be dispensed with.

If one or more of the beneficiaries is a) a minor, or b) under disability, then it is extremely likely a formal passing of accounts will be required.

Where all beneficiaries cannot or will not consent to the estate trustee’s accounts, then a formal passing of accounts is likely required. If a beneficiary simply refuses to agree to provide a release of the estate trustee, the estate trustee’s recourse is likely to proactively pass their accounts.

Note that the passing of accounts extends well beyond the fees charged by the estate trustee or paid by him or her, and extends to the entire administration of the estate.

Accounts are usually only passed once, at the end of the administration of the estate. It is crucial for the estate trustee to maintain excellent records throughout the entire administration process.

Preparing accounts is a duty of the estate trustee, and therefore if they retain advisors (such as a law firm) to assist them to prepare accounts these fees are often deducted from trustee compensation.

The legal fees incurred filing an Application to Pass Accounts is usually borne by the estate.

The legal fees for any opposition to the trustee’s accounts may or may not be borne by the parties or by the estate. Much depends on who prevails and whether any position taken was correct, or if not, reasonable.
Probate fees in Ontario: Estate Administration Tax

When it is necessary to probate an estate in Ontario, “probate fees” (properly known as ‘estate administration tax’) must be paid to the government of Ontario.

Estate administration tax (“EAT”) is paid by the estate, and is not borne by the trustee/executor.

EAT is calculated on the value of the estate probated:

- $5 per $1,000 of estate assets up to $50,000, and
- $15 per $1,000 of estate assets over $50,000.

EAT is payable when an application for appointment of estate trustee is filed and is payable on the value on the date of death of:

- Real estate in Ontario, minus debts secured against this real estate (mortgages, HELOCs);
- Personal property.

Debts: There is no ‘credit’ or reduction in the value of the estate for EAT calculation for debt that is not secured against real estate. For instance, debt such as outstanding tax debt, credit cards and personal lines of credit does not reduce the value of the estate for EAT purposes.

[Note: it is possible that tax debts that are secured by a lien registered against real estate. If so, the value of the lien will reduce the value of the estate for EAT calculation.]

Real estate outside Ontario is not subject to EAT in Ontario.

EAT is payable by the estate, but the estate trustee has personal liability for proper payment and reporting. If the estate has liquid assets, with good legal advice it is usually possible to get access to these funds prior to probate in order to submit the EAT payment with the probate application. If there are no liquid assets, it may be possible to get a Court order deferring payment of the EAT for up to 90 days after the Certificate of Appointment.

The estate trustee must file an EAT return within 90 days of receipt of the Certificate of Appointment. This return is in effect an ‘asset’ return, quite different from the ‘income’ returns most Canadians are accustomed to. It is common to retain the services of a lawyer to prepare and file the EAT return.
Minimizing Probate Taxes

Many techniques exist to minimize probate fees, but most require proper planning by the testator prior to death. The most common is the use of ‘dual wills’, whereby assets that require probate pass under one will, and other assets that often do not require probate (such as the shares of a family or private business) pass under a separate will that is not subject to probate. Of course, this requires advance planning and preparation by the testator (the person making the will), and, a lack of dispute among the potential executors and beneficiaries.

Don’t be penny-wise, pound-foolish

Many ‘plans’ designed to minimize probate fees are in fact very bad planning, which create far more trouble and cost than they avoid. This is particularly true when using ‘joint ownership’ with adult children of the testator. For more information, see our eBook on Disputes.
How to apply for Probate

In order to apply for probate in Ontario, the executor (or a lawyer acting on his or her behalf) must prepare the application, serve it on all the required people, and file it in the right Court registry.

Prepare the right forms

You must use prepare your application for probate using the correct court forms, as set out under the Rules of Civil Procedure in Ontario.

Rule 74 of the Rules of Civil Procedure sets out the forms used in Ontario for estate matters.

The precise forms to use depend on the circumstances, including whether the estate trustee is being appointed ‘with a will’ or ‘without a will’, and other factors, including whether the proposed executor is an individual, or corporation.

Depending on the circumstances:

- You may need to file consents from other people to your appointment as estate trustee;
- You may need to file renunciation(s) for anyone who is entitled to serve as an executor and who does not wish to serve;
- You may need to post a bond, or, apply for an order dispensing with one (particularly if you live outside Ontario, or, have not been appointed executor pursuant to a will).

In addition to the application itself, you must prepare and file all of the required supporting documentation. This includes, at a minimum the Application, a Notice of Application, and a Certificate of Appointment.

If the appointment is ‘with a will’, you must file the original will and originals of any codicils, together with a copy of an ‘affidavit of execution’ (ideally, one was prepared and signed by a witness at the time the will was signed by the deceased).

You must complete the forms:

i) accurately,
ii) completely, and
iii) consistently (all information the same in all places).

Ontario court forms can be found at: www.ontariocourtforms.on.ca
Serve the application on everyone entitled to service

Once you have the documentation prepared, you must serve your application as required by the circumstances. This means, at a minimum, serving every person entitled to share in the distribution of the estate (including minors and charities).

You must serve the parent or guardian of a minor beneficiary, and for adult beneficiaries for whom an attorney has been appointed, the attorney.

If there are beneficiaries under 18 (minors) or unborn or unascertained, you must serve the Children’s Lawyer.

If there are incapable adult beneficiaries without an appointed attorney, you must serve the Public Guardian and Trustee.

Beneficiaries of a will must receive proper notice of their entitlement. At a minimum, for recipients of a specific bequest, this means enough of the will to confirm the bequest. Residual beneficiaries of an estate are entitled to receive a copy of the entire will.

There is no obligation in Ontario for a ‘reading of the will’ and individuals who are not beneficiaries have not right to be told what the will says by the executor. Obviously this can cause significant problems for individuals who believe that they should be in the will. Once a probate application has been filed, the will is a public document and can be viewed at the courthouse where the probate application was filed.

File the application with the Court, in the right place

You apply for probate by filing your complete application, with proof of service, and the Order sought, with the Estate Registrar of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice.

You must apply for probate in the County or district in Ontario where the deceased resided at death, and if the deceased did not reside in Ontario at death, then where the deceased owned property.

Calculate and Pay the Estate Tax

You must submit payment of the applicable estate tax when you file the application for probate.
Bonding

When required

One of the most difficult aspects of many applications for probate is dealing with the requirement to 'post a bond' or 'secure a Court order dispensing with the requirement to bond'. The table below summarizes when a bond or Order to dispense is required.

- No will: nominee of foreign trustee must be resident in Ontario: Bond or dispense
Court Orders to Dispense with Bonds

A ‘bond’ is a form of ‘surety’, posted by an insurance company, for the benefit of the beneficiaries, to protect their interests. A bond for an estate must be for twice the value of the estate.

It is actually very rare to post a bond for an estate trustee in Ontario. These bonds are very difficult and expensive to get.

In some cases it is possible to secure an Order from the Court that dispenses with the requirement for the estate trustee to dispense with a bond. When available, these orders are much quicker, cheaper, and easier to secure than actually posting a bond.

If a proposed estate trustee cannot secure an Order to dispense with a bond, often the most practical thing to do is for the proposed estate trustee to renounce and to have someone else who can obtain an Order to dispense with the bond (such as an experienced estates professional) apply to be appointed the estate trustee.
The Information Required to Dispense with a Bond

The information that must be submitted to the Court for an Order by way of Affidavit to dispense with a bond is:

1. The identity of all beneficiaries of the estate;
2. The identity of any beneficiary of the estate who is a minor or incapable person;
3. The value of the interest of any minor or incapable beneficiary in the estate;
4. Executed consents from all beneficiaries who are sui juris to the appointment of the applicant as estate trustee and to an order dispensing with an administration bond should be attached as exhibits to the affidavit. If consents cannot be obtained from all the beneficiaries, the applicant must explain how he or she intends to protect the interests of those beneficiaries by way of posting security or otherwise;
5. The last occupation of the deceased;
6. Evidence as to whether all the debts of the deceased have been paid, including any obligations under support agreements or orders;
7. Evidence as to whether the deceased operated a business at the time of death and, if the deceased did, whether any debts of that business have been or may be claimed against the estate, and a description of each debt and its amount;
8. If all the debts of the estate have not been paid, evidence of the value of the assets of the estate, the particulars of each debt – amount and name of creditor – and an explanation of what arrangements have been made with those creditors to pay their debts and what security the applicant proposes to put in place in order to protect those creditors.
The Information Required for a Probate Application

The following basic information and documents are required to apply for probate:

1. Original signed will if available, or confirmation that the deceased died without a will

2. Death Certificate

3. Information about the deceased person:
   - full name (including middles names) of the deceased
   - date of death
   - last address of the deceased
   - occupation or former occupation of the deceased

4. Information about the proposed executor(s):
   - full name (including middles names) of each proposed executor
   - relationship of each executor to the deceased
   - occupation or former occupation of each executor
   - address, phone number and email address of each executor

5. Information about deceased person’s relatives: for each living child, sibling and parent:
   - full names (including middles names) of each living child, sibling and parent
   - relationship of each of the above relatives to the deceased
   - occupation or former occupation of each of the above relatives
   - address, phone number and email address of each of the above relatives
   - confirmation as to whether any of the above relatives are mentally incapacitated

6. Information about the estate:
   - full list of assets & value of each asset (bank accounts, investments, automobiles, property, etc.)
   - information regarding pensions (if applicable)
   - confirmation of CPP payments (amount and when last payment was received)
